Dear Sharu,

I thought of sharing this on chat or call but felt a letter would be appropriate as what I want to share consume quite a bit of space or time.

I still do remember the moment last time I met you. The visuals of me hugging you and you resting your head on my shoulders are still intact as if it happened today. That day, that day I realized what I failed to do in the month of April. How I misunderstood you and your feelings. That's the moment, I promised myself to respect what you feel every time and all the time.

The first time I felt like talking to you, purely because of what you are and how true you are. The more I think of it today, my respect for you has only doubled and my feelings have tripled after completely understanding what you are.

Today marks the end of May and time has flown like anything since the first time I saw you. As I told you on new year's Eve, I am having the best time of my life. I cherish every second I am with you and completely understand how lucky I am to be with you.

Having said that, now you are back in the US, I know you want to concentrate on accomplishing your dreams and achieving everything you thought of. As you said, you might not be able to interact with me as much as I like and I completely understand that. So, I have decided not to disturb you much with my text or unnecessary request of talking to you or meeting you.

Just because I won't be texting you voluntarily it does not mean that I am ignoring you and just because I won't ask myself to meet you, it's not an indication that my feelings have diminished. I will always love you, no matter what happens and you will be in my heart forever.

You might not accept that you have feelings for me, but I have realized what I am to you. I want to say to you that "I like you, I trust you and I miss seeing your cute face until you feel the time is appropriate to meet you". I have a strong feeling that no matter how far we are, my feelings for you will never change. You are my best friend and I love you until my last breath.

Santhosh
